Their goal was to make a high quality video game cinematic styled trailer. In order to do this, they invented a video game called Fragball on which we based the action.

The film shows an excerpt from the personal story of Snap, a Fragball gamer, as he plays out his last round - round 6.

In order for R6 to be consistent and solid, they conceptualized a video game on which it would be based and for which it could be seen as a trailer.

After it was finished developing of the film, they ended up with a video game concept: the R6. It was decided to resume development on Fragball independently of R6, but more details about that are currently still confidential.div.overlay { width:1040px; height:584px; } #imgplay { margin:70px 0px 0px 190px; } #player { background:no-repeat url('/videos/news/2010/april/round.jpg') top center; } #splash, #player, #player embed, #player object { width:560px; height:304px; }
